

Moses Rozier
(1839/1852–aft. 1900)

Enslaved Man, Freedman, & Successful Farmer

Pulaski County, Georgia

by Timothy Dean Hudson

Moses Rozier [Mose] (1839/1852–aft. 1900) was born along the banks of Gum Swamp Creek in what was then northern in Pulaski County, Georgia. That region was put into Bleckley County in 1912. He was of African descent and born as an enslaved worker living on one of the farms there.

Based on their very close connection illustrated by the surviving records, Moses Rozier must have been either the son or younger brother of Jonas Rozier (c1812–1890s), an enslaved man who grew up as the property of John Rozar Sr. Jonas' mother, Winn, had no children born between 1825 and 1829 that survived early childhood, for her children listed on the 1829 inventory of Rozar's estate matched those he listed in his 1825 will [1]. However, Winn might have had additional children born during the 1830s. If Moses were born about 1839 or in the early 1840s, then he could have been Winn's son, making him Jonas' younger brother. In this case, Moses would have grown up as an enslaved man belonging to one of John Rozar's elder sons, Seaborn Rozar and John Rozar Jr. Alternatively, Moses could have been Jonas' son, although the records do not give any indication that Moses was the son of either of Jonas' two known wives, Jane or Lydia.

Moses Rozier has only been located on two federal census records, and these give contradictory information regarding his approximate year of birth. His age given on the 1880 federal census places his birth in about 1852 [2], while the 1900 federal census records his birth in February 1839 [3]. Neither he nor his wife have been located on any census record after 1900. A record described below suggests that Moses was at least eighteen years old by January 1867, so he was probably born no later than about 1849.

The first known record of Moses Rozier was in the latter portion of 1866, when he, Jonas Rozier, and Jacob Rozier had settled in Houston County near the county seat of Perry. Houston lay along the western side of Pulaski County, with Hawkinsville, the county seat of Pulaski, lying just a few miles east of the Houston County line. Along with them was Lucinda Rozier, a former enslaved woman who was possibly Jacob's wife, and Meady P. Rozar, the middle son of their former owner, John Rozar Jr.

Jacob Rozier and the other former slaves all settled on the farm of John Faulk, an exceedingly wealthy farmer who apparently split his time between his plantations in Houston County and those further north near Macon, in neighboring Bibb County [4]. On 18 January 1867, Jacob Rozier and the others, all described as a "freedmen," entered into a contract with Faulk in Houston County for the ensuing year. Faulk promised to supply the former slaves with "mules, land and working utensils, quarters and fuel." In exchange for their labor on his land, he also promised to give them one third of the "corn, cotton, peas and potatoes raised upon the place."

For their part, Jacob Rozier and the other freedmen agreed to cultivate all the land that Faulk "set apart for them to cultivate," and to grow the type of produce directed by him and "under his supervision and instructions, or that of his agent." They promised to "keep the fences in good repair," to perform other labor requested by Faulk, and to "be responsible for all damage done to Stock while in our possession." At the end of the growing season, they agreed "to gather the crop and deliver the cotton at the depot on the Macon & Brunswick Rail Road or in Macon." Rozier and the other freedmen also agreed:

...to conduct ourselves in an honorable, peaceable, and obedient manner towards said Faulk, his family or agent, and not allow his Stock or property of any kind to be injured or destroyed if in our power to prevent it. We further agree to pay the said Faulk for all demands he may have against us for provisions or other indebtedness. We further agree that if one, or any of us, fail to comply with the above contract, the one so failing Shall forfeit his, her, or their part of the crop. We also agree, that we or either of us voluntarily leave the plantation of said Faulk during working hours we forfeit two dollars ($2⁰⁰) per day, or any fractional part thereof.

Jacob Rozier and the others made their marks to the document. To ensure that it was properly read to them, two witnesses certified that they heard the contract read to the freedmen and saw them make their marks to it. One of the witnesses was Meady Rozar, the third son of John Rozar Jr. If Jacob was indeed owned by either Seaborn or John Rozar Jr., then he would have known Meady Rozar from the time of his birth in the mid-1830s [5].

Jonas moved into southwestern Pulaski County about 1868, but Moses' whereabouts between 1868 and 1875 are unclear. He is not listed on the Pulaski County tax digests during that interval, nor was he enumerated on the 1870 federal census of Pulaski County. This suggests that he lived elsewhere during this period.

In 1875, Jonas Rozier's sister, Jane Rozier (Jinny), paid taxes on her 435 acres of farmland in the Salem Militia District in northeastern Pulaski County, with her sons, William A., James O., and Ephraim Rozier listed after her. Since they cultivated their mother's land, Jinny's sons were identified as freedmen without a white employer. The only other Rozier in the Salem Militia District was Jacob Rozier Jr., listed immediately before Jinny. Unlike her and her sons, Jacob had a white employer, indicating that he cultivated a different tract of land [6].

In late 1875 or early 1876, Moses Rozier joined Jinny and her sons on her farm in the Salem Militia District. On the 1876 tax record, Moses was listed between Jinny and her sons. While William A., James O., and Ephraim Rozier all paid taxes on household and kitchen furniture, farming tools, and their poll tax, Moses was only assessed a poll tax [7]. Moses Rozier continued to pay taxes as a freedman living in the Salem Militia District near Jinny's sons through 1884 [8]. On the 1880 federal census, Moses and his family were listed as living among Jinny Rozier's family, enumerated between her sons Ephraim and Thomas [9].

In 1884, Moses paid taxes on household and kitchen furniture valued at $10 and his poll tax. Also in 1884, Moses Rozier is listed next to Jonas Rozier in the Whitfield Militia District in southwestern Pulaski County, but he was assessed only a poll tax. This indicates that during 1884, Moses left the old Rozar farm now cultivated by Jinny's sons and settled near Jonas in southwestern Pulaski.

In 1885, Moses was listed next to Jonas on the tax digest of the Blue Spring Militia District. While Jonas owned livestock, household furniture, and farming tools more valuable than any other black farmer in the area, Moses was only assessed his poll tax [10]. On 27 April 1885, Moses and Jonas Rozier both mortgaged property to Richard Henry Vaughn to secure their repayment of supplies he furnished for that growing season [11].

In 1886, Moses was listed by himself in the Blue Spring District, assessed only for household and kitchen furniture valued at $8 and his poll tax. Meanwhile, Jonas was listed in the adjoining Whitfield District. On the 1887 tax digest, "Mose" and Jonas Rozier were both assessed taxes in the Whitfield District, with Moses assessed for his poll tax and household and kitchen furniture valued at $15 [12]. On 1 August 1887, to secure payment of several promissory notes, Moses and Jonas jointly mortgaged "Our entire Crop of Corn and Cotton now growing on the lands on land cultivated by and for us on R. G. Fulghum place in this Pulaski County" [13].

These joint activities suggest a very close familial relationship between Jonas and Moses Rozier, but it is difficult to pinpoint their precise connection. While Moses' residence on the old Rozar farm with Jinny and her sons during the 1876–1884 period suggests a close connection to them, the 1880 federal census marshal who visited them recorded a stark difference between Moses and Jinny's sons. Jinny's sons were mixed-race, the children of Jinny and Seaborn Rozar, a white man. The census marshal recorded them and their children all as "mulatto," while Moses and his family were described as "black." While certainly not definitive, this suggests that Moses was not Jinny's son. However, no known evidence has arisen to help us discern if Moses were Jonas Rozier's son or younger brother.

Moses Rozier married about 1872 to Julia Ann ? (Feb 1850–aft. 1900), although no official record of their marriage has been located in either Pulaski or in any other Georgia county. In 1880, they only had one child, whose birth was recorded as April 1880. On 2 May 1888, "Julia Ann Rozar" mortgaged

My entire Crop of Cotton & Cotton seed now growing and to be grown by me this year said Crop consisting 8 acres of land more or less on the Plantation Known as the Burrows place in Pulaski County Georgia.

to R. H. Vaughn to secure payment of $25 due 1 October 1888 [14]. It is unclear why Julia made the mortgage instead of Moses.

As described earlier, in 1890, Moses and Jonas Rozier paid their taxes in the Whitfield Militia District. There are no additional recorded mortgages for Moses or Julia Rozier in Pulaski County, but they continued farming in Whitfield through 1900, when she was listed as having a total of fifteen children, only eight of whom were then alive [15]. There is no known record of either of them after 1900, so it is unclear they died in Pulaski County or moved elsewhere with their children.

Another tie between Moses and Jonas Rozier is a statement made on the death certificate of Mariah Rozier, Moses and Julia's second surviving daughter. Born in 1886, she married James Miller [Jim] in about 1904, although no record of their marriage has been located. In 1910, they lived in the Finleyson Militia District of southern Pulaski County with their two young children. On 26 May 1919, Mariah gave birth to a stillborn baby in what must have been a difficult birth. At 8:00 a.m., she died of "Hemorages caused by childbirth." Jim Miller provided the information for Mariah's death certificate, and he identified Mariah's father as "Jonas Rozier." This is intriguing, for it clearly shows a family connection between Moses and Jonas. The 1900 federal census lists Mariah as Moses and Julia's daughter. Moreover, in 1886 when Mariah was born, Jonas was an elderly man. He was more likely Mariah's grandfather rather than her father. Mariah Miller was buried in the Mount Air Baptist Church Cemetery, the same cemetery in which Jonas' wife and daughter are buried [16].

Moses and Julia Ann Rozier's third daughter, Ellen Rozier, married Daniel Fitzgerald on 6 July 1906 [17]. Ellen and Dan Fitzgerald are also not found on the 1910 federal census in Georgia, but between 1920 and 1950, they lived in Wilcox County, Georgia. It is possible that Moses and Julia Rozier followed them to Wilcox County and died there.
